THE RAMBLING LINER NOTES ~ ~ ~

Some say that my music "works." There is no grand plan, but somehow, at least to me, it works out in the end, and I am happy, something happens with the way the songs are thrown together, where after a while, I can even fool myself into thinking that there was a plan. There never is really...

Most of these songs were recorded on my own, between 2000 and 2002. Some are accurate in terms of the actual recording ("The Little Man" and the Strumstick songs, for example). Others are accurate in terms of what they were written but have only recently been recorded (like the creatively titled "New Old Song").

But, these rambling notes aside, just give the songs a bit of attention for a couple of listens, and remember, it was all VERY WELL CALCULATED... it is actually a part of a big plan of mine... ~ ~ ~ Alwanda

None of the songs on this CD belong here. At least, I never intended to have them here. In my mind, I was thinking, there could be the DWAB guitar CD... or the "Chinese instrument" CD... The song "The Little Man" was supposed to be its own mini-CD and I had such a collection of songs that I had helped me out on that I was even going to do another DWAB John Lewis CD.

But, as you can tell, these "ideas" didn't quite materialize. Make it's because I can procrastinate when it comes to some of these ideas. Make it was because I was afraid that if I did not put these songs on a CD soon, that I never would get around to doing it at all... I don't know...

and a way, though, it works in much the
